Additional information

Origin/Cultural Background/Dating Background of Ndefang-Pinying: Ndefang-Pinying constitutes one of the villages in Ngemba. Ngemba lies between Longitude 100 12' and 100 47' East of Greenwich Meridian and latitude 50 45' and 60 18' North or the Equator. Asobo Pius in "Mother Tongue Influence on English Language in Cameroon: A Case Study of the Pinyin Language" notes that the Pinyin people serve as universal sets of the Ngembas of the North west region and the Bamboutous of the Western region. Thus, the Pinyin language, accordingly shares some intelligibility with the Bamboutous Language because of family and trade links. Like most Ngemba people, they believe in God, divinities, spirits, ancestors and the practice of magic and medicine. For them, as it is the case with most Ngemba villages, there is nothing like natural death.

Occasion: Staged performance

Summary This story uses the motif of race between a fast and a slow animal, well known from the Aesopian tradition (The Hare and the Tortoise). Yet, here the consequences of the slow animal's victory go well beyond the moral of the myth and explain why human life is ephemeral.

At the beginning of the world, there was nothing like sickness, old age, and death. People lived on and on forever. There was no pain, nor sorrow and everybody lived happily. But the world was becoming almost overpopulated or congested with people. One day, Dog and Chameleon had a heated debate on the issue of the world's population. Chameleon held the view that when people are born, they should grow old or fall sick and subsequently die. When people die, this creates a chance for other people to be born to replace them. And the newborns will live on and subsequently die. This to Chameleon would guarantee the continuity of the cycle of death and life. But Dog held a contrary view. To him, people should never fall sick, grow old or even die because all these cause sorrow and pain to mankind. People should live on and on forever without falling sick, growing old or dying.

Neither Chameleon nor Dog gave in to the other's point of view. Both strongly maintained their own opinions. No compromise. They took their case to God and asked him to say who between the two was right.

Each of them defended his point of view so intelligently and well that God could not find fault in any of the two views. God, being just, told them that their case could only be settled through a contest. "Look at that drum on top of that hill! Whichever of you can reach it first, is the winner. He can then drum it and announce his own point of view. I shall with immediate effect adopt the point of view announced thereof," said God to the two contestants, Chameleon and Dog, in the presence of all the people in the world.

When the race began, Dog being a fleet-footed runner, ran as fast as he could, leaving Chameleon many, many miles behind. Chameleon did not surrender but crawled slowly and steadily towards the mountain on which the drum was placed. In the course of the race, Dog came across a dead buffalo. He did not hesitate in settling to munch this free meat. He ate and ate and ate until the Chameleon overtook him, climbed up the mountain and drummed:

"When people are born they should grow old, fall sick and die.

When people are born they should grow old, fall sick and die.

When people are born they should grow old, fall sick and die..."

Dog was stung by the drumming and the announcement made by Chameleon. He left the meat, gathered all his strength and ran "v-e-e-p" [sound made by narrator], up the mountain. But it was already too late. God remained faithful to his pledge and Chameleon's announcement was registered. Since then, when people are born, they are subject to sickness, old age, and death. This is the origin of sickness, old age, and death.

Analysis

Myths related to the origin of death are universal, with each region in the world adopting a specific take. This myth in Pinyin recalls an early Greek myth of the origin of death, wherein death is a consequence of the disagreement between Zeus and Prometheus. As a result of this quarrel, Zeus creates a woman, Pandora, and presents her to Prometheus' brother Epimetheus, with death being one of the results of her opening of the box, which she was given to bring with her.
