Mary Pope Osborne , b. 1949 (Author)

Mary Pope Osborne lives in Connecticut. She has written over 100 books for children and young adults: mysteries, novels, retellings of myths (including a six part series retelling of the Odyssey), biographies, picture books, a book of American Tall Tales, and a book for young readers about the major world religions. She is best known for her best-selling Magic Tree House series (the first volume of which was published in 1992).

More than 135 million copies of the Magic Tree House series have sold worldwide. The series has been translated into more than 30 languages. Osborne has also co-authored a companion series to the Magic Tree House books, together with her husband Will Osborne and her sister Natalie Pope Boyce and in 2012, Osborne created a Magic Tree House Classroom Adventures Program at here (online resources for teachers to promote literacy, accessed: October 1, 2018).

The Magic Tree House series was a #1 New York Times best seller. In 2006, the popularity of the series outdid that of Harry Potter as #1 on the New York Times Bestseller list (according to Cynthia Haven, Stanford University, see here, accessed: October 1, 2018). The series has received awards from the National Council of Teachers of English and the American Booksellers Association.

Moreover, Osborne's awards for her works include: Ludington Memorial Award from the Educational Paperback Association, Lifetime Achievement Award from the Random House Sales Force, Heidelberger Leander Award (Germany, 2010), Minion Academy Global Literature Award (Japan, 2011), Books-Ago-Go Literacy Award (2015), Jupiter Award for Science Education (2015); Best Books of the Year Lists of School Library Journal, Parents' Magazine, Publishers Weekly, the Bulletin of the Center for Children's Books, and Bank Street College; awards from the Parents Choice Foundation, the Children's Book Council, and the International Reading Association, the Boston Public Library, the Atlanta Public Library, the Carolina Alumni Association, the Virginia Library Association, and the Delaware Library Association; Honorary Doctorate of Letters from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (2013).

Osborne is a passionate advocate of literacy and access to theatre for children. Several Magic Tree House books have been adapted for children's theatre productions, including musicals.

Summary

In the Magic Tree House books, American siblings Jack and Annie (from Pennsylvania) are sent on missions in different times and places from a magic tree house by Morgan le Fay, a benevolent fairy who is a mother figure to the children. Their task is to recover a lost story in Latin, entitled: Vir Fortissimus in Mundo. This story used to be in a library in ancient Pompeii. Morgan le Fay also provides the siblings with a book called Life in Roman Times, which, throughout their adventure, they peruse frequently to find out facts and information about ancient Roman life.

The children are transported to an olive grove outside ancient Pompeii. They find themselves wearing tunics, sandals and leather-bags. They use their book to find out where they are and in which year (AD 79). They feel the ground shaking, but still set out for the city of Pompeii, crossing a dried-up stream.

On their way through Pompeii, trying to find the library, they see gladiators and a number of sites, such as the temple of Jupiter. A soothsayer warns them that the end is near, but also tells them the location of the library in the villa of Brutus. There, the children find the Latin scroll with the right title.

Jack learns from his book that Mount Vesuvius will erupt on the very day they are in Pompeii at noon. A sundial shows that it is almost that time. A terrible earthquake starts. Jack reads in his book that Pompeii will be covered in pumice, which they see falling down shortly after. They protect their heads with pillows and flee through the chaos of Pompeii, noticing the great damage to buildings. When they come to the dried-up stream, they see that the bridge they had used earlier has caved in. When they try to cross it, they get stuck in the pumice. They remember Morgan's advice that the story they had to find will save them. Annie pulls the ancient scroll out of Jack's bag, holds it up to the sky and shouts: "Save us, story!" Suddenly, a larger-than-life gladiator appears and rescues the Annie and Jack. The children run to the Magic Tree House and are transported back home. There they find out from Morgan le Fay that the title of the story refers to Hercules, who was the one who rescued them.

Analysis

Much of this novel is set in ancient Pompeii. It is an introduction for young readers into ancient Roman life and, specifically the historical event of the eruption of Mt Vesuvius. Readers of this book learn many facts about ancient Pompeii and ancient Roman life, in general, mostly through dictionary-style entries from Morgan's book Life in Roman Times.

In this series a time-travel device, the magic tree house, is used to educate young readers in a number of basic facts about the ancient world. The narrative is structured around a quest which is the reason why Jack and Annie travel around Pompeii and experience a variety of aspects of Roman everyday life, as well as the eruption of Mt Vesuvius.

The aspects of everyday life shown are centered around topics which children can easily relate to by comparison to their own world, such as food, clothing and everyday life in a shopping street. We hear in some detail what a Roman villa looked like on the inside. Some famous buildings and sites are also mentioned, as well as some typical Roman professions, in particular gladiators. To add excitement to the story and set it in a particular historical context, it is told against the background of the eruption of Mt Vesuvius.

Several of the facts of Roman life mentioned are depicted in black and white illustrations. The novel itself is followed by two pages of facts about Pompeii and ancient Rome.
