CELTIC CONFERENCE IN CLASSICS

McGill University
Université de Montréal

WHEN /

JULY 19-22 2017

WHERE /

McGill University and Université de Montréal

ABOUT THE EVENT /

Since 1998 the Celtic Conference in Classics has rotated among universities in Britain, France and Ireland. This is the first year that the CCC will expand into North America. The CCC includes upwards of 20 panels on broad topics in Classics (Greco-Roman history, philosophy, literature, archaeology, reception) with roughly 15-20 presenters for each panel. Rather than small panels on many topics, the CCC allows each panel to explore fundamental questions in classical studies.

Essentially, 20 large-scale conferences on major research topics in Classics are occurring simultaneously. It is recommended that scholars move between panels in order to shape interdisciplinary perspectives and approaches. Academic cross-fertilization is imperative. Specialist panels are open to experts from other subject-areas and scholars from different national traditions are encouraged to build international academic networks among their home institutions in order to foster future collaboration. The CCC is a democratic, inclusive organization and it invites scholars and students to discuss fundamental issues of Greco-Roman society and culture. The official languages of the CCC are French and English.
