William Terence Deary , b. 1946 (Author)

Terry Deary is a bestselling British children's author. He is also a professional actor and singer, and has written for the stage, television, radio and film. He was born in Sunderland, England, UK. His father was a butcher and he worked in the shop as a boy. He attended Monkwearmouth Grammar School, which he hated. In his mid-twenties, he worked as head of drama in a comprehensive school, an experience that shaped his way to engage with children: 'I wrote my own curriculum – I was able to tell my students things that were relevant to them. I was able to explore their thoughts, their feelings and way of communicating, and I learnt a hell of a lot from them' (Preston 2013). Now he is a prolific British author, also known as an actor and a writer of popular non-fiction and TV, theatre, radio, audio and new media scripts. Terry Deary is the creator of the hugely popular Horrible Histories book series, which includes Groovy Greeks and Rotten Romans. In 2009 CBBC Television launched a Horrible Histories TV series. A set of Horrible Histories theatre plays have also been created in collaboration with Birmingham Stage Company, and a film is planned. Terry Deary's other fiction incudes the The Fire Thief trilogy, a comedic retelling of the myth of Prometheus, and True Time Tales; both have been adapted and will be televised – True Time Tales as a children's animation created by Canada's Eggplant Media. His 2010 novel Put Out the Light (published by A&C Black) won the 2012 Sheffield Children's Books Award. Deary has published over 300 books, spanning the genres of fiction and non-fiction and both child and adult audiences. His books have sold over 30 million copies worldwide and have been translated into 40 languages, and in 2012 he was listed as the tenth most borrowed author in British children's libraries.

Terry Deary's Best Ever Greek Legends develops the concept in his Greek Legends (Twisted Tales series, 2004), and Best Greek Legends Ever (2009).

Summary

A sketch show based on the books of the same name by Terry Deary, focussing on many aspects of history not just the Classical areas. Each episode includes parodic songs teaching children about aspects of history, with both live-action and animated sections often working in conjecture to form the full picture of the sketch. Each sketch is accompanied by the narrative character Rattus Rattus who is used as an accuracy marker for the jokes within the series.

The show takes a non-linear format with each episode covering a broad range of history non-chronologically, although the show makes it clear what era of history and what part of the world that each sketch occurs. The range of history the show covers spans from the stone-ages to the 20th century, the shows classically focussed segments are centred around the Grecian period of the Persian and Peloponnesian Wars, and the Roman period of the Julio-Claudian emperors, although there are many deviations from this.

The classical mythology that is covered focuses a great deal on the Trojan War, although once again there are multiple deviations.

Analysis

The TV show is a critically acclaimed adaptation of the Horrible Histories books at their most engaging. The sketches are often based around fake advertisements* or popular television programmes reimagined in a historical setting, to inform the viewer on aspects of historical life or myth.

Myth is also covered in various ridiculous situations, whilst staying true to the stories, in a way that is important to children, for example the sketch of the story of Helen of Troy is reimagined in the format of a comic strip. This makes it clear to children, aside from the warnings before segment by "Rattus Rattus", that this is not a historical fact but rather an ancient story. Often the episodes focus more on aspects of general ancient life and habits on Classical Myth though.

There have been many controversies surrounding the actual accuracy of the show,* often in terms of its level of historical accuracy and the focus that it puts on the more humorous aspects of history. If a fact has been misreported within the books, then it is highly likely that the fact will also be misreported within the TV show, which means that the issues with the books dealing with the classical world, namely Groovy Greeks and Rotten Romans book carry over to the show.

Although there are controversies, the show is a fantastic starting point for children to become interested in history. It fosters intrigue, and a large majority of bare bones facts are placed within the songs, making them a fun learning tool. Considering that the songs are also parodic in nature, they are also very catchy making them which further increases their educational merit. Notably there is the Spartan parody song of High School Musical, which covers aspects of the Spartan school system, such as the Artemis Orthio and that stealing was regarded as a good thing as long as you were not caught. There is also a Roman parody of the song Bad by Michael Jackson, which covers an argument by the Emperors Commodus, Elagabalus, Commodus, and Nero over who was the worst Emperor.****

Although the series presents a largely simplified view of history, there is a clear effort put in to cover the 'nastier' sides of history. Often the show uses the narrations by Rattus Rattus to make clear to the younger audiences the reason they are showing the horrible parts, and the nastier parts are often treated more seriously than would be expected of a comedy show aimed at children.

 E.g. Dan Snow wrote in the Guardian: "It's wonderfully exciting to watch. It has such a great sense of the past. It's fun, harmless stuff. But it isn't a serious look at the past. It's one step above Blackadder, but that's fine: the Victorians fictionalised their history. We shouldn't try to dress it up as brilliant history. For example, the Four Georges song is great, but George III was only mentally ill for a short period of his reign. It plays to stereotypes, but it's fantastic as entry-level history."
